I think the problem lies in the fact that we are trying to achieve too much with too little. Sometimes, it's better to focus on a few key goals and do them really well, rather than spreading ourselves too thin. This is particularly true in today's fast-paced world, where there are so many distractions and temptations. It's easy to get sidetracked and lose sight of what's truly important. So, my advice would be to identify your priorities, set realistic goals, and work towards achieving them. And remember, it's okay to say no to things that don't matter as much.
